He had gone the mountains of Nevada coun- for a fortnight's vacation with family. On Saturday morn- he was taken ill and a physi- n was summoned. He diagnosed e case as a heart attack and ad- ed the immedite removal of sheriff to the lower altitude Truckee.

The condition of Sheriff McGov- rn continued to grow worse, and spite every effort to save his fe, he passed away before he ould reach Truckee.

The news of the death of this unty official was a severe shock the entire county. The word as received at the county jail by elephone, and soon the news had overed the length and breadth of e county.

Sheriff McGovtrn was born and aised on the coastside of the unty. His parents were pioneer sidents of Halfmoon Bay, and hat place his boyhood was spent. He lated lived for years in South an Francisco, where many mem- ers of his family reside at pres- nt.

Sheriff McGovern, familiarly nown as "Brick" by his close as- ciates, was inducted into office s sheriff of San Mateo county at edwood City, January 3, 1927.

Sheriff McGovern's victory was on at the primary election when e beat his opponent by 6,101 otes.

The votes won at the primary lection, together with the large omplimentary vote scored at the eneral telection, gave Sheriff Mc- overn the enviable record of be- ng the first, of any county offic- al, to receive the highest number f votes cast in San Mateo county o date, since the county's organi- ation in 1856.

Sheriff McGovern was the six- enth sheriff of San Mateo coun- y, his experience of over fifteen ears of service being attained hen he served as deputy sheriff nder the administration of Sher- ffs Robert S. Chatham, the late . H. Mansfield, Michael Sheehan nd the late H. W. Lampkin.

The first man to file his bond s sheriff of San Mateo county as John W. Ackerman, the filing f which dates back to November , 1856; and his induction into ffice the first Monday in Janu- ry, 1857.

Commencing at this time and ollowing through the years until 893, the term of office for sher- ff only covered a period of two ears.

At the termination of Sheriff ckerman's term he sought re- lection, his opponent being Silas ovious.

Records show that Hovious beat ckerson by only 7 votes, the to- tal vote cast by the county for both men only being 915.

Following Hovious' administration from 1859 to 1861, Silas H. Bowman was next elected by the people, his term of office lasting from 1861 to 1863.

Then in his footsteps came Joseph H. Keith, whose term expired October 2, 1865.

Bowman and Keith were called the "Civil War" sheriffs, appropriately named on account of serving the people during the Civil War of 1861 to 1865.

P. W. Lathrop next took up the reins of curbing crime, his services as sheriff lasting for three terms—

John E. Edgar, who served the people, following Lathrop's administration, also enjoyed three terms of office from the years 1872 to 1878.

George W. Green next became the people's choice for sheriff, his term of office being shortened by his untimely drowning in Redwood creek, Thanksgiving day, November, 1881.

H. W. Walker was appointed to fill Green's unexpired term which brought his services up to January, 1883, after which John Henry Hatch was elected by the people to serve for two terms—1883 to 1887.

William H. Kinne was next in line of service, the period of his administration being for three consecutive terms—1887 to 1893.

William P. McEvoy, who was the first sheriff to serve under the new ruling of the four-year term, commenced his duties in 1893 and was shot to death by Thomas Flannely during his fourth year of office—1897.

Josiah Mansfield, under-sheriff at the time of McEvoy's death, and who also was wounded by Flannely, was appointed by the supervisors to fill out McEvoy's unexpired term.

Following its termination, Mansfield sought a term of his own and was elected, serving on through the years until 1907.

At this time Robert S. Chatham became the people's choice for sheriff, his services lasting from 1907 until 1911.

Josiah Mansfield's good record still being in the minds of the people won him another term of office following Chatham's administration, which embraced the years of 1911 to 1915.

Michael Sheehan then won the election as sheriff and served for two terms from 1915 to 1923, he being succeeded by H. W. Lampkin, whose death occurred from an accident a year from the day he entered into office, January, 1924.

Thomas C. McGovern, was then appointed by the supervisors to fill Lampkin's unexpired term, which lasted from January, 1924, to January, 1927.

McGovern aspired for a term of office of his own during the 1926 state and county election and won the office as sheriff at the primary election.

RUSE RESULTS IN LOSS TO MERCHANT

The Universl Shoe store on Main street, conducted by Caruso & Schmittou, was made the victim of a larceny ruse last week which resulted in the loss of the contents of the till. The scheme for the robbery of the store had evidently been worked out by two thieves who worked by a preconceived plan.

The robbery was made while Caruso, one of the partners was out and Schmittou was alone in the store. The store is not equipped with a telephone, and so a call for one of the partners was received at a nearby establishment. Schmittou left the store for a moment to answer the phone call. He was gone less than a minute but the time was long enough for the perpetartion of the robbery.

The thief had evidently been watching the store while his confederate used the telephone, and as soon as the proprietor had left, he ran in, opened the cash register and left with the contents. In his hurry, however, the thief overlooked the bulk of the money, which had been laid aside ready to deposit in the bank.

A Communication

Burlingame, Calif., July 14, 1927
Mr. D. E. O'Keefe,
c-o Times-Gazette,
Redwood City, California.
Dear Sir:

As chairman of the San Mateo County Boy Scouts, my attention has been called to an article published under your signature in the Times-Gazette under the healing "Citizen Objects to Restriction of Park." While you do not mention the name of the citizen or the name of the organization which you accuse of monopolizing public property for private uses, it is apparent that you are referring to the Training Camp maintained by the San Mateo County Boy Scouts in the Memorial Park under a permit granted by the Board of Supervisors.

It is gratifying to us to know that out of more than a thousand visitors to the Memorial Park and Boy Scout Camp, the prominent citizen to whom you refer is the only one who has offered either public or private criticism.

Perhaps this is a sufficient answer to your public denunciation, but because yours is the first unkind utterance on the part of any responsible citizen in three years of constructive work in the interest in San Mateo County boys, we do not propose to accept this single blot on our record.

Since your article is not a news item but is a direct criticism of a splendid organization for the building of better citizenship, the rules of decency demanded that you make some effort to ascertain the facts before undertaking the role of a public critic.

I cannot find that you have consulted any of the Scout Leaders, or that you have made any effort to verify the statements made to you by the one disgruntled citizen, whose complaint apparently was based on purely personal grounds.

The camp authorities have no record of the incident to which you refer, and in my opinion the statement that any citizen was molested by the Scout guards on July 4th; was told to move on; was threatened with arrest, or was otherwise discourteously treated, is absolutely unfounded.

It is true that Scouts are posted at the main entrance to the small territory occupied by their camp and visitors are admitted only during specified hours. This reasonable regulation is common to all well conducted Scout Camps and is necessary to insure good discipline and avoid interference with the intensive training program which the boys are required to follow.

If your informant attempted to enter the camping place occupied by the Scouts outside of visitors' hours, he was no doubt told courteously that the camp was closed to visitors temporarily but would be open again at a stated hour. If he then "loudly and strongly," as you state, insisted on over-riding these reasonable regulations, the Scouts had no recourse except to report the incident to the Camp Director.

The Scout Camp makes temporary use of about five acres of ground, designated by the Board of Supervisors and so placed that it does not interfere in any manner with the use by the general public of the remaining three hundred and five acres of Park land.

The Scouts ask for themselves only the same degree of privacy in their immediate camp quarters that any citizen would rightfully expect if he established his individual camp within the park boundaries.

It is apparent that you did not personally visit the Park on July 4th, or at any time during the Camp. If you had done so you could have found nothing but words of praise for the constructive work which is being carried on here for the benefit of San Mateo County boys. You would have sensed immediately the air of courtesy, helpfulness and good fellowship which is characteristic of all well conducted Sout camps. You would have met among the Scout leaders, an earnest group of public spirited men who are likewise prominent citizens and tax payers but who are unselfishly devoting their time and energies to the end that our boys may grow under proper leadership into better manhood.

You would then perhaps have asked your complainant what he is personally doing in a constructive way for the benefit of his community when he is not engaged in vigorously asserting his own abstract prerogatives as a tax payer.

I am sure you would not then had published, without some investigation, the unkind article which appeared under your name in a recent issue of the Times-Gazette, and I ask you in all fairness to give the same publicity to my reply that you have given to your criticism.

Yours truly,
C. J. ELDRIDGE,
Chairman District Committee

MUSSEL DEATHS CAUSE PROBE OF POISONING

The death within the past ten days of six persons following the eating of mussels caught along the shore of this county and in Marin county has aroused local and state health officials, and a warning hh been issued by the state against the eating of the shell fish.

Dr. W. A. Brooke, coroner of San Mateo county, announced this week that he had sent specimens of the poison mussels to the Hooper Foundation at the University of California, for analysis, and it is hoped that from the investigation which is being conducted there that the cause of the poison may be learned.

One theory was advanced by Dr. Ebright, president of the State Board of Health. It was that the poison might be caused by the unusually lenghty exposure caused by low tidal conditions. In event, he states, the condition will doubtless be only temporary.

Frank T. Green, San Francisco city toxicologist, advances the theory that the poisoning is due to mytinotexin, a disease of the mussel due to impure water conditions.

An organic or chemical poisoning in the water in which the mussels live is given as the cause of of the poison by Dr. H. F. Cue, assistant health officers of San Franscio.

Laboratory experiments were being conducted by Dr. Karl F. Meyer, consulting bacteriologist for the state board, to determine if possible the exact cause of the poisoning.

Of the six persons who have died from the mussels only one has thus far died within this county, a child who passed away enroute to the South San Francisco hospital. The others have died in San Francisco after eating mussels caught along the coastside of this county.

A Japanese family of three were seriously sick at last reports and a child four was not expected to recover.

Because of the epidemic of poisoning, a mussel dinner planned for the evening of July 26 by the San Mateo County Sportsmen's Club at Halfmoon Bay has been abandoned. The meeting will be held as planned, but other forms of food will be used.

The program for the evening had been prepared under the direction of Frank Griffin, president of the Redwood City Exchange Club, and athletic coach of the Sequoia high school. It consisted of water contests of various kinds including a water relay and diving exhibitions. Several well-known swimmers participated as well as many local swimmers. Among the visiting swimmers were Miss Bunny Fergus, fancy diving champion of the Pacific Coast; Miss Monta Morgan, sprint champion; and Miss Edna Williams of this city, free style and back stroke title holder.

A comical touch was given the entertainment by a bathing beauty review. Those particitpating were Benny Biggerstaff, as "Miss Five Points;" Jack Brownell, as "Miss Emerald Lake;" Bud Kellogg, as "Miss Dumbarton;" Frank Ferran, as "Miss Atherton," and Sam Enten, as "Mr. America."

BURLINGAME MAN CHOSEN SHERIFF SAN MATEO CO.

James J. McGrath, formerly assistant postmaster of San Mateo and a candidate in the last election for the office of auditor, was the man chosen by the board of supervisors last Monday to succeed the late T. C. McGovern as sheriff of San Mateo county. The appointment was made at the afternoon meeting of the board, and was practically the only business transacted at that session.

The motion for the appointment of McGrath was made by Supervisor Francis and was seconded by Supervisor Brown. An attempt was made by Supervisor Hickey to have the appointment laid over to the next meeting, but this failed to secure the action of the board, and Francis' motion was passed, all voting for the appointment except Hickey, who refused to vote.

The new sheriff is well known throughout the county. He was born and raised in San Mateo. As a boy he attended the schools there and later attended Santa Clara university from which institution he was graduated. He is exalted ruler of the San Mateo Lodge of Elks and is past grand knight of the Knights of Columbus of that city. He resides with his father, brother and sister in Burlingame.

In accepting the office of Sheriff, McGrath said:

"To those of us who knew Sheriff McGovern so intimately, his death came as a sad blow. It was unexpected and so sudden that the passing of this popular and efficient public servant is beyond comprehension.

"At this time I wish to say that there will be no change in the policy or personnel of the sheriff's office. Sheriff McGovern carefully selected his staff of assistants and I have every confidence in the men of his choice. Undersheriff Peter J. Larrecou and every member of the staff will be re quested to remain under my administration."

No Miss Should Miss This

"Just look at that, just look at this;
Do you think us not a Miss?
A glance given here, a glance given there
Do you think we are not fair?"

So sing the girls who would aspire to be Miss Redwood City, but while beauty may be as has been said, its own reward, one beauty will be more favored even that that. For out of all the girls who decorate our streets, and few towns are more favored in this respect, one lucky damsel will be chosen fairest of all.

And now girls, the most important part of this announcement the part that really makes it an announcement at all, proceeds to be. Three of our citizens, three who have shown themselves to be true and unbiased connoiseurs of feminine pulchritude have been selected as a committee to pass on the charms of the applicants for this great honor. This committee is headed by no less a judge of attractions than John E. Layng, and assisting him are two able colleagues, Harold Powers and Sam Winklebleck. With so able a committee not the least little charm will go unnoticed and unrecorded, and the fortunate winner may consider herself as truly and without doubt the town's fairest charmer.

California's mineral production in 1926 is placed at $456,408,000 in a report just issued by State Minerologist Lloyd L. Root. This figure represents an increase of $24,000,000 over the 1925 production, which likewise showed an advance over the output of the year before that. The marked increase in 1926 is credited principally to the petroleum output which, though 8,000,000 barrels less in actual quantity, had a greater value by $25,000,000 due to price advances which became effective last March and continued throughout the remainder of the year. The petroleum production last year is placed at 224,335,000 barrels, having a worth of $355,000,000.

The bark Star of India, once the pride of seven seas, was towed into San Diego harbor last week destined to become a marine museum. The Star of India was built in 1863 in Ramsey, England, and for years her masts bent beneath trade winds the world over. Purchased a year ago by James Coffroth the vessel was donated to the San Diego Zoological Society as a marine museum and was towed down from San Francisco. In addition to being a marine museum the Star of India will be used as an armory and nautical training station for the local naval reserve unit.

As a move to trap drivers of overloaded trucks who have been trying to evade the load-limit provisions of the motor vehicle law, patrols of State traffic officers will be placed on duty on the highways from midnight to daylight. Snook, chief of the State Division of Motor Vehicles, was promoted by information received from the five truck-weighing squads that many truck drivers use the early morning hours to escape detection. More than two hundred arrests for overloading have been made.

This is the name announced as first choice in the contest conducted by the San Joaquin Valley Tourists and Travel Association. More than 10,000 were suggested. The grand prize, one week's free accommodation for two people in the Yosemite Valley, went to James C. Anderson of Fresno. The winning name appeared in the list 243 times, but, because Anderson was the first to submit the winning title, he was awarded the prize.

Wars and Rumors Of Wars

TEN years ago we were firmly convinced that we were seeing the last war. We were fighting the greatest battles of history, and using weapons so fiendish that even the hardened militarists immagined that the thought of another war would be so repulsive to public sentiment that another such conflict would be impossible. Yet today we read of international policies and wonder just how soon the clouds of war will again gather over our land, and in just how many years we may again be raising crosses over American graves in foreign soil.

At this very moment occurences are transpiring in Italy and the Balkan peninsula more grave and freighted with danger than anyone would have thought the shootng of an Austrian grand duke in 1914. Yet that one shot rang around the world and brought famine, desolation and death in the farthest corners of what we are pleased to call civilization.

In Italy today, the dictator of that country is working for an army of five million men. Why? We can only surmise. But an army of five million is not maintained for peaceful purposes. Developments are equally bad in Russia, China and South Africa. Any one of these points may become the focus of the interminable struggle of man against man.

In times like these it is imperative that we read with reason, judge with fairness and think with charity. These are trying times for the statesmen of every nation, more trying, perhaps, than have faced those of any other time. For this reason it is important that we, the people, at once the governing and the governed should develop an attitude of tollerance and charity and consider the claims, the aspirations and ambitions of every race—not excepting our own—with the same scale and judge every people with fairness and charity.

Such a policy is merely the application of the greatest commandment to races and nations, and if war is to be ended it must become universal. The individual attitude of each person makes little difference in the attitude of nations, but in the final analysis nations are but congregations of individuals and the attitude of each bears its weight in the balance of world affairs.

Praise vs. Flattery

HERO worship is an old affliction and one not altogether to be reprehended, but the public hysteria which occasionaly follows some great and valiant achievement is at times disconcerting if not positively distasteful to the achiever. We know of no more striking example of this than the experiences of Captain Lindberg.

While we might envy Captain Lindberg the glory of his remarkable feat, we have often felt sorry for the young flyer in his attempts to remain composed in the flood of acclamations which has greeted him at every point since his trans-Atlantic flight.

We admire the brave flyer, and believe that too much real praise cannot be given for fearless accomplishment. But, also, we believe that a great deal of that which has passed for praise in his case and in that of many another really great man, is more of a curiosity than praise. This type of adulation is distasteful to a man whose character is great enough to enable him to perform the deeds whch calls forth the flattery.

No more striking example of what we mean can be given than that of a photographer at a beach resort who has had a life size dummy of Captain Lindberg made by which the patrons may stand and get their pictures taken. "Immitation," it has been said, "is the sincerest flattery." But to a man of character and sense, such demonstrations must be repulsive. We can imagine the young flyer's reaction at seeing a picture apparently of himself draped gracefully around some of the "clinging vines" who grace the majority of our beach resorts. Let it be said for Lindberg, however, that through the whole storm of praise, flattery and curiosity, he has kept his head and today is the same unaffected, earnest young American that he was before his record making flight.

SOFT DRINK LICENSES GRANTED BY SUPERVISORS

Applications for soft drink licenses were given consideration by the board of supervisors last Monday. Eleven applications were received. Of these five were granted, two denied and four continued to the next meeting of the board.

Those receiving permits were: Jno. F. Corria, Lomita Park; P. Lara, Millbrae; Clarice McCuley, Redwood City; G. W. Moore, Brighton Beach, and Louis Beltramo, Menlo Park.

The continued applications were those of J. S. Cook, A. H. Suhr, Carlo Fernando and Charles Gust. Louis Martini of Colma and Geo. Dare of Millbrae were denied permits.

APPLICATION FOR BRIDGE IS REFUSED

The board of supervisors on Monday refused to grant the application of F. J. Carey for a permit to construct a bridge across San Francisco bay at Candlestick Point in the extreme northern end of San Mateo county. The bridge proposed by Carey was to connect the point in this county with a point on Bay Farm island in Alameda county.

The refusal of the supervisors to grant the bridge permit followed a controversy of several months between the Carey interests and the proponents of the proposed Rincon hill bridge in San Francisco. Three members of the board of supervisors of San Francisco appeared before the board of this county Monday and asked that the matter be indefinitely continued by the board.

Supervisor McSheehy of San Francisco acted as spokesman for the San Francisco delegation. After months of consideration, he stated, the supervisors of San Francisco had selected the proposed Rincon bridge as the most practical of a score of bridges proposed. The San Francisco board, he said, had therefore concentrated their efforts on securing a permit from the war department for the construction of the Rincon bridge. The war department, he believed, would favor the granting of tht permit if it were not for the attitude of the navy department, but this difficulty, he thought, would be soon overcome. If, however, the permit were granted for a bridge across the bay just over the county line in San Mateo county, McSheehy stated, it would be more difficult for a permit to be secured from the war department for the San Francisco bridge. He, therefore, asked that the matter be continued until some definite action could be secured on the Rincon Hill bridge. Attorney Hall C. Ross, representing Carey, had previously also asked that the matter be continued.

A motion was made by Supervisor Thompson that the matter be continued, but this failed for want of a second. The board expressed itself as in favor of continuing with the hearing.

After all parties had been heard Supervisor Hickey moved that the request for a permit be denied. In making his motion, Hickey stated that San Mateo county had already granted a permit for a bridge at Little Coyote Point, a bridge which would be of great value to this county. He felt that a bridge at Canlestick Point would be of no value to this county as it is beyond a range of hills which would prove a barrier to traffic from the bridge.

Hickey's motion was passed unanimously. McSheehy, speaking for the board of supervsiors of San Francisco thanked the board for their action, and expressed a wish that soon tht two counties might be under one government.

LAST CONCERT OF SEASON WILL BE GIVEN SUNDAY

Next Sunday in Hillsborough the last symphony concert of the summer series will be given, Ossip Gabrilowitsch then making his third appearance as conductor.

Following is the program:

Sixth Symphony (Pathetifue) ..... Tschaikowsky
Two Nocturnes ..... Debussy
Overture, "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner

The most important work, Tschaikowsky's symphony, is a general favorite. Containing a wealth of melody and superb orchestration, the hearing of this great work will attract interest from all peninsula patrons.

The Debussy numbers, both exquisitely beautiful tone poems, are especially suitable for an open-air performance and will be heard most advantageously in the charming surroundings of the Woodland Theater.

The concerts of the current symphony season have been most successful, exceeding in attendance and interest those of last year. Much praise is due the Philharmonic Society of San Mateo County and its members for the splendid community spirit and enthusiasm that has made the symphony seasons possible. With public co-operation increasing as it has done at each concert, the series next year should be still greater. The officers of the Philharmonic Society who have been instrumental in making possible these brilliant events are: Mrs. George Armsby, president; Mrs. John B. Casserly, vice-president; and Mrs. Thomas A. Driscoll, secretary.

Learning Love's ABC

by O. Lawrence Hawthorne

And school begins again today! . . . .
Though years have swiftly sped away,
Sweetheart, don't you remember?
Don't you recall the long ago
(When you and I were young, you know)—
That morning in September?

Have you forgotten how I tried
So hard to get a seat beside,
In front of, or behind you?
Don't you remember what I wrote
In that first ardent little note,
Or must I now remind you?

Remember how I failed to know
Where any of the rivers flow—
Or when or why or whether?
Do you recall that afternoon
(For me it ended all too soon!)
When we walked home together?

Oh, little did we realize
That what we saw through lovers' eyes
Was wisdom Nature brought us!
But here we are today, and know
That things we dreamed of years ago
Mean more than what was taught us.

BROADWAY HEARING SET FOR JULY 30

The board of trustees on Monday evening received protests on the extension of Broadway. Only one protest was received, signed by 81 residents of the proposed improvement district. Most of the protestants, it was stated, were from the outlying sections of the district where the assessment was very low. None of those in the zones close to the proposed improvement were on the protest. A hearing was set for Saturday, July 3th, at 10 o'clock a. m., at which time the matter will be discussed. The clerk was instructed to notify each of the protestants of the date set.

The Rough Riders Are Coming

The drygoods box, stuffed with a few coils and tubes and batteries, was placed on a sandy hilltop where Fleming could rest his elbow on it.

Under the supervision of H. H. Harrod, chief electrical engineer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the box, in a space of two hours, became a portable radio telephone to which were attuned thirty receiving sets placed at strategic points in a Cuban village, on camouflaged camera parallels and on boats out at sea off Laguna Beach.

Fleming spoke into the mouthpiece of the radio telephone and two thousand men—Rough Riders in blue shirts and khaki breeches and sailors in white canvas—raced ashore in fifty small boats to where a mob of Cuban insurrectos stood knee-deep in the surf, waving their arms and yelling with wild joy.

He spoke again and ten cameramen spun little cranks.

Another word and men aboard transports shoved horses and mules overboard into the water, the animals swimming toward the beach.

Dark women in loose wrappers and half-naked little children ran out of thatched huts, danced under palm trees and shrieked with excitement. At the end of a long pier was a battery of loud speakers which thundered the director's voice to the boat crews who had no receivers on board.

The boats, heavy with troops and supplies swept in on high, white-crested breakers. Some of them capsized and the soldiers fought through the surf, weighted down by packs, guns and cartridge belts.

Cubans helped run the craft up on the beach. Horses were caught as they came dripping out of the water. Boxes and bales and supplies were piled up on the sand. Long lines of soldiers formed on the pier. They were silhouetted against the flashing sea as the sun dipped below the horizon.

Standing behind Fleming's drygoods box radio set were a number of men who had participated in the actual landing of Roosevelt's Rough Riders at Daiquiri twenty-eight years ago. Some of them had come a considerable distance to witness the picturization of the historical episode. Among them were Lewis Maverick of San Antonio, Texas, vice-president of the Rough Riders Association; Colton Reed of La Jolla, secretary-treasurer of the organidation; George B. Hoffman and R. L. Carlin of Los Angeles; David L. Hughes of Sawtelle and John Tait of Chandler, Arizona.

"The Rough Riders" had other technical aid, too, from naval officers who helped direct the landing. One of them explained to Noah Beery and George Bancroft the best way of having a horse or mule tow one through the water. Hermann Hagedorn, who wrote the story for Paramount, saw to it that Charles Farrell, Charles Emmett Mack, Fred Kohler, Frank Hopper who portrays Roosevelt, and Fred Lindsay who impersonates Leonard Wood, talked with the old time Rough Riders present to get valuable pointers on their characterizations.

A siren was used for the start and finish of scenes. When Fleming wanted an answer to certain question he got them by flag semaphores on the boats. The boat too far out for wig-wag conversation, sent up smoke signals to show they understood the directions.

When the filming was over, Fleming loaded his megaphone, field glasses and other equipment into the drygoods box and used it for a packing case instead of a radio.

"The Rough Riders" will be shown at the Sequoia Theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Following a communication from the board of supervisors of Santa Clara county, stating that that board was ready to proceed with the consruction of their portion of a bridge across San Francisquito creek, west of Menlo Park, the matter of building tht bridge was given a lengthy discussion by the board of supervisors of this county.

It was proposed to construct a new road on approximately the same site as the old Sandhill road abandoned years ago in the time of Senator Stanford. The proposed bridge would be about a half mile down the creek from the present structure. It is proposed to maintain the present road and connect it to the new bridge by a short connecting link. This road would be used for heavy traffic, while the new road through the Stanford campus would be limited to light vehicles.

After some discussion the matter was continued by the board until the next meeting.

Mrs. Fred Whooten of San Francisco is visiting Mrs. John Poole.

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Behrens last Saturday.

John Lesley, blacksmith for W. W. Beeson, while driving on the county road Wednesday evening, was run into by a team from Santa Clara. The former's buggy was badly damaged and some slight injuries were received by Mrs. Lesley.

The school trustees have appointed Miss Laura Battainier to fill the vacancy in the corps of teachers in the public school caused by the resignation of Mrs. W. P. McEvoy (nee Lizzie Hall.) Miss Battanier is a competent teacher, and the trustees can be congratulated on their seclection.

What promises to be one of the most sensational suits ever tried in this county was filed in the county clerk's office late Tuesday afternoon. The plaintiff is Miss Emma C. Clark and the defendant is Sheriff W. P. McEvoy. Miss Clark brings suit to recovtr $20,000 from the sheriff for his failure to marry her as he had promised. The complaint alleges that defendant promised to marry her and in consideration she promised to marry him. When the case comes up for trial some racy developments are expected if rumors are to be credited, more than one family skeleton will be made to come forth and dance a mazourka.

The Gorgas Idea

Better Health Longer Life

GORGAS MEMORIAL INSTITUTE

LET'S JOIN THE MILKING BRIGADE

By Marion T. Benson, M. D.
Atlanta, Ga.

Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

As a psysician my years of contact with the people suffering from various disease, malnutrition, and faulty diets, have made me an enthusiatic advocate of the use of milk. Milk makes the diet foolproof for the thinking eater, if he will only take it in sufficient quantities.

There are an incredibly large number of people who fail to realize the importance of milk in the diet of adults. Most of them know that it is essential for the growing child, but they do not appreciate the fact that a diet that will support normal development in childhood will promote the maximum well-being in maturity.

It is vital to every prospective mother that she should understand that the baby who is coming needs plenty of lime to develop its bones. Nature insists that it obtain this lime, and if there is not enough in the mother's food the baby takes it from her body. That is sometimes the reason why teeth of prospective mothers decay so easily. The expectant mother should consume a quart of milk a day, if she means to keep herself and her baby in the best condition.

There is considerable demand on her lime reserve, not only for the development of baby's bones, but later for the secretion of milk, which is rich in lime.

A mother with a very young baby needs much milk. Her rest is disturbed night and day. Her strength is at low ebb and the upbuilding of strength tissues and nerves is more necessary than ever. Milk is the most nutritious of all foods.

It may appear to some that everyday, commonplace milk is too ordinary to be interesting. But I hope that the gool old glass of milk with bread and butter may yet be raised to the dignity it deserves, and that it will stay in our midst. The welfare of our community rests more on what we eat and drink than on the size of our treasury. The result of milk drinking is evidenced plainly in the health of those school children and adults who have given it a fair chance. Let us all join the milk-drinking brigade and give milk a chance to improve our health.

AT BIRTH BABE IS 1-4 HEAD; HEAD LARGER THAN CHEST

By Samuel W. Kelley, M. D.
Cleveland, Ohio

The child is not merely a "little man" or a "little woman;" it is a child. And that is something different from the adult in its anatomy, its physiology and its disease conditions.

The child, whether well or ill, should be studied in his proper class, and judged by standards suited to his age of development.

I will make just a few comparisons as examples. In the symmetrical adult the total height is eight times the length of the head, and the midway point falls upon the front bone of the pelvis.

Compare this with the new born babe, whose whole figure is only four heads tall, that is ,one quarter of his entire height is head. That is normal for him. But imagine an adult with a head forming one quarter of his height!

A child two years old is about five heads tall. At four or five his head is one sixth of his height. After the age of six, growth from the waist down goes on more slowly, and at fourteen years the height is about seven heads. This is but one instance among hundreds of the constant changes in the growing child.

At birth the head is larger than the chest which contains the lungs and heart and part of the greatest blood vessels, and also the thymus gland which later, instead of growing, diminishes.

Picture an adult with the head larger than the chest!

The muscles of the child are comparatively small, weak, and soft. His bones contain only one third of the lime salts which give firmness and two thirds of animal matter which is pliable. In the adult the proportions are exactly reversed. In the young, the periosteum, that strong membrane lying next to the bone, is thicker and is richer in blood supply, and peels easily from the bone. Can you not see that different effects will be produced by violent injury under these different conditions?

The child has all his fat just under his skin and none packed around his internal organs, as in the adult.

In the adult the blood gives 8 per cent of the entire weight. In the infant the blood is only 5 per cent of the body weight. Do you think that the infant can endure hemorrhage as well as the adults

One could list hundreds of equally striking differences, not only in the anatomy but in the functioning of the body, and in its behavior under disease or injury.

So many are the peculiarities of children as compared with adults, that there has risen a great special department in medicine, known as pediatrics. However, surgical diseases in children have as many peculiarities as their medical conditions, so that many surgeons are especially experienced and skillful in treating them.

PUBLIC VIEWS THREE SERIES NASH CARS

Sweeping aside all precedent in puplic favor the three entirely new series of Nash cars displayed by dealers throughout the country last week were given the greatest public indorsement was made in the eleven years' history of the Nash Motors Company. Outspoken approval and enthusiasm were voiced by thousands who crowded the Nash showrooms from New York to San Francisco and from Winnipeg to Palm Beach, and the public indirsement was made in the substantial form of record-breaking sales. "The crowning achievement of C. W. Nash," was the statement expressed by public and dealers alike in almost every section of the country.

The lower and more sweeping body lines, the mechanical refinements, and the stunning new color combinations, were accorded unstinted approval by those who thronged the showrooms, and even greater amazement was expressed over the almost unbelievably smooth performance of the cars by those who hal an opportunity to drive them.

"So emphatic and so overwhelming has been the public acceptance of the new Advanced Six, Special Six and Standard Six series," said E. H. McCarty, general sales manager of the Nash Motors Company, "that this will be by far the biggest July in the history of the company."

Telegrams, voluntary and spontaneous, from distributors, gave authentic reports of the reception on announcement day. These messages, coming in from all sections of the country, soon made it apparent there was not doubt about the public attitude, whether the cars were viewed on Broadway, New York, or Phoenix, Arizona.

"By actual count more than 6000 people visited our own store today and our dealers also report big crowds" said C. B. Warren, New York distributor for Nash Motors. "This has been the greatest day in Nash history." The Warren-Nash establishment is only one of the forty-six Nash sales quarters in metropolitan New York.

In Denver, five hundred people visited the showroom before 8:30 o'clock in the morning and by 11 o'clock at night The James-Nash Motors Company reported 2100 visitors.

In Boston the day opened with a rush. At 3 o'lock in the afternoon, C. P. Rokwell, Inc., turned to the telegraph company for "first aid" and the wire which went to Kenosha said: "We are practically cleaned out of new models. Please rush additional shipment."

A constant stream of visitors passed through the showrooms in Chicago—city dealers reporting a total of 3700 the first day with sales of 67 cars. The day following 4400 people visited the showrooms and on that day 86 cars were sold. The reception accorded by buyers in Los Angeles prompted the Troy Motor Sales Company to predict that the next six months will be "the biggest six months in our history."

Detroit, too, gave the new Nash series a big ovation. The Miller-Judd Company, Nash distributor, describes the reception in these words: "Nash showrooms in Detroit crowded with people. Greatest reception Nash ever received. Many compliments on design and prices. Dealers all clamoring for more cars. We are entirely out of many models. Rush shipment."

Sixteen hundred and thirteen people visited the Nash Pittsburgh Company's showroom while showrooms of all city dealers there were also crowded. Atlanta, Toledo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Spokane, Wash., Milwaukee, Charlotte, N. C., and other distributors and dealers in all sections, wrote or wired a report on the enthusiastic reception accorded the new Nash models.

Men Marooned

STORY FROM THE START

Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of weakened lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkwan. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realizes cost him the love of his fiancee, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer. With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his firm friend, Garth meets Doctor Quarrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarrier complains he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald."

Guthrie fiercely resented the presence of the people whose boat was slowly approaching the landing. Why had they been sent him at this time—these strangers? This bearded ass of a geologist would spread himself all over the place, demanding attention; would doubtless ask him to go to Akimiski and save the stuff salvaged on the beach. Well, he would pack them off to Albany at once. But the sister seemed a different sort—nice eyes she had, straight, direct, but something sad about them; a sense of humor, too, for she laughed flat in Quarrier's face at the McDonald story. So the free-trader was in the bay still? Strange, that! Did he mean to winter there? If he did, it would cut into the Christmas trade in foxes—would be bad for Elkwan. Daring chap, this McDonald. Who was he, anyhow?

The arrival of the boat cut short his rumination.

"I see you brought plenty of food," commented the factor with a smile, as the sailors, under the direction of Etienne, began unloading boxes from the heavily freighted craft.

"Yes, we didn't want to run short before reaching Fort Albany," replied Quarrier.

"But the excess weight will bother you on these tide-flats." Then he continued, "Doctor, I regret that I shall have to put you in the trade-house with your men. I have a spare bedroom for Miss Quarrie. You will eat at my quarters, of course."

"Oh, we don't expect much at a small trading post, Mr. Guthrie," replied Quarrier, magnanimously. "If you can make my sister comfortable, it's perfectly satisfactory."

The girl laughed. "As sister has put up for three months with a most uncomfortable two-by-five berth on a wobbly schooner, Mr. Guthrie," she said, "I know I shall revel in your hospitality."

She had shed her coat and sou'wester and Guthrie's eyes measured her with a quick glance. Taller, he thought, than she seemed in the boat, and cleanly made. The eyes which had seemed black, he saw were brown. Young, too, she was; much younger than her brother, and what hair!

As he led the way across the clearing he wondered how the presence of this white woman would affect the girl with the dark skin who was slowly coughing her life away. He found himself embarrassed—at a loss for an explanation of the situation to his guest.

"Miss Quarrier," he forced himself to begin, "we have a very sick girl in the house—it is unfortunate we are so crowded, but I have no other room. I'm giving you mine."

He had stopped as he spoke, and stared down at his moccasins; then continued, while her questioning eyes studied his face.

"She came here at the spring trade—very sick—would have flickered out in weeks without proper food. Old Anne and I have done our best, but canned milk and broth are all we had for her. And now it may be any day—I was terribly anxious about her—to get home. You noticed it—when we met you?"

"Yes, I noticed it," replied the girl. "I knew you were worried about something. I'm so sorry, Mr. Guthrie. We shall be a great burden at such a time."

"No, it's not that. I have room for you, and the others don't matter. But it will be unpleasant for you—in the house."

Miss Quarrier straightened, threw back her head and held his embarrassed glance as she quietly said:

"Would it help you to know that I was a nurse overseas through the last three years of the war?"

He went red under the deep tan. She would not mind Ninda, then—she, to whom agony and death had been commonplaces.

"I am glad—you will understand. You see—she, somehow, wants me with her at the end—fears I'll not be there. I've promised her."

As he spoke, the quizzical look of the girl softened to one of pity.

"I know. I will help you."

Under a sky flushed with the rose of the northern twilight, Joan Quarrier and her brother stood on the high shore of the Elkwan, whose flat surface caught and held the warm tones of the heavens. On guard before the factor's house, inside the stockade, lay the great airedale, satisfied, since his introduction, that these people were at Elkwan with the consent of his master, but nursing, nevertheless, a deep dislike of the man with hairy face, who had dared attempt to rub the ears of the former mascot of the First battalion, Royal Montreals.

"So there's a dying Indian woman at the house?" Quarrier was saying.

"Yes. He asked me to see her. She has a frightful pulse and temperature. It's a matter of days—hours, I should think."

"Matter of squaw-man, also," sniffed Quarrier.

The girl's straight brows contracted with irritation. "No, I don't think so. It's a matter of big heart. Old Anne, the Cree cook, found her sick in a tipi, when the Indians were here in June for the trade. Out of sheer humanity, they took care of her."

"You believe that story?" scoffed the man of science.

The eyes of the girl hardened. "Well, Mr. Grundy, it's none of your business or mine, is it?"

"I should distinctly say it was my business—to have my sister, without so much as an apology to me, sharing his house with his—squaw," protested Quarrier in tones of outraged dignity.

"Very well. How would you like to have me sleep with you and the men in the trade-house? He's given me his room. What more could he do? And I'd advise you as a guest of Mr. Guthrie to be careful what you say. Did you notice his face?"

"You mean the scar?"

"No, I mean the mouth and the eye."

"What about them?"

"Just this, blind man. I'd feel very sorry for the person who was the cause of Mr. Guthrie losing his temper. Whether it's pity or affection, I don't know, but rather than have the last hours of this poor child disturbed, he'd throw you into the river and the rest of us with you."

"Nonsense. I'll report him to his superiors at Albany if he comes any high-handed business with me."

"Arch," she taunted, "you know that you're really a bit timid, underneath." The man flushed angrily and started to reply, but the girl stopped him with her raised hand. "You were pretty scared when that blow struck us—rather lost your head, brother." Then she said, soberly: "I advise you to be very careful how you bluster to the factor of Elkwan."

Guthrie appeared at the door of his house and called them in to supper. As Dr. Archibald Quarrier followed his sister into the living room where the table had been set for three, little in its meager furnishings escaped his roving eyes.

"We are very primitive here, you see," Guthrie said as he watched the geologist's minute inspection of his quarters, which terminated at the bookshelves. "And I cannot guarantee Anne's bread, it varies, but her caribou stew and broiled whitefish I hope you will like."

"My brother, as a scientist, Mr. Guthrie, is nothing if not thorough in his inspections," apologized Joan Quarrier with a grimace which failed to conceal from her host her embarrassment. "And I shall revel in your whitefish."

Quarrier turned petulantly. "There you go again, Joan, always making remarks at my expense," then addressed Guthrie. "I see from your books that you are not interested in science."

With a significant glance at the girl, Guthrie soberly answered: "No, I fear I haven't the scientific mind. I waste my time up here reading fiction and history—poetry, too."

"Poetry?" With silent deprecation, Quarrier shook his head as he took the chair Gordon offered at the table.

Old Anne shuffled in with the steaming stew and crisp whitefish, her wide, wrinkled face alight with pride in the dignity of her office. Quarrier was deep in the narrative of his summer voyage to the east coast of Hudson's bay in the interest of a Toronto syndicate, which had been formed to explore the region and to exploit, if commercially practicable, the copper and iron deposits known to exist, when the sound of coughing from an inner room brought Guthrie to his feet.

"Pardon me," he said, and left them.

Quarrier's thick eyebrows knotted. "He's paying the piper now. How an educated man, as he seems to be, can come up here in this Godforsaken country in the first place, and then take up with a squaw—Pah!"

The girl he addressed sat tense, with chin up, listening, as though she had not heard. In a moment Guthrie opened the door, his face gray with anxiety.

"Could you come—a moment?" he asked the girl who had risen from the table. "You said you could help—she's pretty bad?"

Joan Quarrier hurried to her medicine kit in Gordon's room, emerged, and followed him. There, to the annoyance of the man who ate heavily of Anne's cooking, they stayed until he had finished. At length, when the opiate had brought respite to the sufferer, Joan and Guthrie returned to the living room.

"I'm sorry, sir," said Guthrie, "that you should be disturbed—that I should need the services of your sister, but she's been a godsend."

Quarrier nodded stolidly, without removing his pipe from his mouth. Then, as if spurred by a sense of duty to the performance of a task not too disagreeable, cleared his throat and began:

"Mr. Guthrie, may I ask how you, a man of education and family, find yourself in a—minor position, so to speak, with the Hudson's Bay company?"

A corner of Guthrie's mouth lifted. His rather deep-set eyes shifted from the questioner to meet the glance of the girl, half amused at the abrupt question, half wondering at his answer.

"Your question is a fair one," he replied. "I came here for my health. I came back from overseas with gassed lungs."

"Ah, I see. Where was your home, may I ask?"

"Montreal."

"You—you can't be a relative of Charles Guthrie?" demanded the other, his interest suddenly aroused.

"Brother."

"You, a brother of Charles Guthrie!" Quarrier's prominent eyes bulged in amazement at the factor of Elkwan.

"You are more flattering to my brother than to me," and Guthrie joined Joan Quarrier in an amused smile.

"But you're not staying in this country—this business, since you've regained your health?"

"I don't know. I rather like the life."

"Charles Guthrie is a member of the syndicate which sent me to the east coast to examine those iron and copper deposits. He'll be interested to hear from you at first hand."

Again the firm mouth of Guthrie shaped a faint smile.

"I'm not so sure of that. He's rather given me up as a black sheep, you know."

"For staying up here, I presume?"

"Yes, for not coming home—this summer."

"Um!"

Guthrie rose, and lighting a candle, for the September night had fallen, carried it to the sick room, where old Anne was on guard. Returning, he lit the small living-room lamp. And in the mind of the woman who watched, surmise followed surmise concerning the factor of Elkwan, for in the room he had given up to her were three autographed likenesses of a beautiful girl.

Then Quarrier described in detail the accident to his power schooner off Cape Jones, the wild night on the bay with an improvised and useless rudder, and the stranding on the beach of Akimiski island.

"It was the next morning that this red-headed pirate, McDonald, discovered us and sent a boat ashore."

"You say he took some of your stuff?" asked Guthrie.

"Yes, he said he needed flour and gasoline."

"And he got it?" suggested the other, with a laugh.

"Yes, but instead of paying what it's worth here, on the bay, he paid me St. John's prices."

"Well, for a pirate, he was rather liberal, wasn't he? He hails from St. John's, they say. Has been up here two summers, but always went back in the autumn. This year he told some of the Indians that he would winter in a cove at the south end of the island. Akimiski is famous for silver and black fox."

"I can't understand why the company doesn't run him out of the bay if he's hurting their business."

Guthrie laughed. "Why, man, he has as much right here as we, or the Revillon Freres. And as to running him out, I'm inclined to think that McDonald would take a lot of running. Did you happen to go aboard his schooner?"

"Yes, I went board to get my money."

"You didn't notice a machine gun or two lying around?"

"No!"

"Well, the Crees say he has them. Evidently, he has come to stay."

"So you're going to sit calmly here and let him get the fur?" snorted Quarrier, contemptuously.

"That's it," agreed Guthrie. "You see, we're a bit afraid of this wild man with the scarred face. The rumor has drifted up here that he had an impressive war record."

The irony was lost on the geologist.

"Afraid to fight for your rights, eh?" he ridiculed, oblivious of the bullet-furrowed cheek of the man who faced him.

At the reproach, the face of Guthrie lit with amusement, but a glint in the half-closed eyes prompted Joan Quarrier, mortified by her brother's gaucherie, to intervene.

"To a Canadian veteran, that remark is positively insulting. I fail to recall anything of a warlike nature in your manner with our pirate, Arch. As a matter of fact, you seemed quite overawed."

"Overawed? Ridiculous!" snapped Quarrier. "I was glad to sell flour and gas we couldn't take with us."

Guthrie's twinkling eyes met those of the girl. "They say his scarred mouth is rather awe-inspiring. Possibly scars are repulsive to your brother," he suggested. "They are—to some people."

The tone of the last—the sudden tightening of face muscles—the swift sobering of the eyes, spurred the quick intuition of the girl to pierce the armor of his raillery, to surmise what the seared cheek of the speaker might have brought to him of bitterness and pain. But why? she wondered. The red line from eye to ear only lent dignity—distinction, to the cleanly modeled features. Why should this badge of service be the source of secret humiliation? But she was confident that it was.

Quarrier changed the subject. "By the way, Mr. Guthrie, when can you send for the stuff I left on the beach and take it to Albany? I can pick it up next spring when I return to the bay."

Evidently deeply occupied with his thought, for a space the man addressed made no answer; then he said, indifferently: "Some time this winter, possibly, when the ice sets hard in the strait."

"What? Not before then? There are some valuable ore specimens and stores—boxes of them. That pirate will come back for them."

"We'll be hunting geese until cold weather drives them south."

"You're not hunting geese here, are you? Why couldn't you go before you go on your hunt—tomorrow, in fact?"

"Archie!" The sharp challenge of Joan Quarrier at the callous insistence of her brother was checked by the level tones of the factor.

Soft-Hearted Warders

Local authorities at Raratonga, Cook islands, are gentle with prisoners. A judge from New Zealand, having sentenced a man to ten years' hard labor at Auckland, was surprised to find the prisoner sitting next to him at a movie theater the night before his departure for prison. The native warders felt that, since the criminal was going away to have an unhappy time, he might as well have one pleasant night before his departure.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

United States and Japan Oppose British Cruiser Demands.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

BRITTANIA rules the waves, and she intends to go on ruling them, if the efforts and arguments of her representatives at the Geneva naval limitation conference are a true indication of the national spirit. Last week the conferees devoted themselves to the subject of cruisers, earnestly discussing the conclusions reached by the naval experts and, at this writing, having reached nothing like an agreement. As was explained a week ago, the British demanded a minimum of 600,000 tons of cruisers, most of them preferably below 7,500 tons each, on the ground that their world-wide commerce lanes and their need of protecting the home food supply required this, and evidently because their innumerable naval bases would enable the vessels of restricted cruising radius to operate anywhere. America wanted the limit put at 250,000 tons and said the United States needed vessels of 10,000 tonnage, not having adequate naval bases abroad. Her delegates, however, in the effort to make the conference a success, offered tentatively to make the maximum limit 400,000 tons.

Then the Japanese, who previously had supported the British desire to have the battleship program revised, surprised every one by coming out strongly against the British cruiser demands. Having received cabled instructions from Tokyo, Admiral Saito announced that the original minimum American figures of 250,000 tons as the maximum cruiser tonnage for America and Britain were quite acceptable to Japan. At the same time he declared the British figures, totaling approximately 600,000 tons, are out of the question so far as the Tokyo government is concerned.

"Japan is anxious to achieve a real reduction and limitation of armaments," Admiral Saito said. "We find the figures in the American plan most reasonable. Japan believes the minimum American figures should be adopted rather than the higher tonnage, which, by promoting construction, would increase armaments. The other suggestions of vastly larger tonnage, which would require the other interested powers to build up to these high levels, would defeat the purpose of the conference."

"We would never dare get off the boat in Japan if we accepted the British scheme," one Japanese delegate said.

Much taken aback, the British delegates said they would look over their figures again to see what possible alterations could be made with a view to further discussions.

Observers in Geneva and official Washington see in the British demand for at least 550,000 tons of cruisers a manifestation of the British insistence on preserving the mastery of the seas. Lord Robert Cecil and his colleagues, they say, are convinced that, though America would be granted parity with England, our congress would not permit the building of so large an American navy for reasons of economy and because the United States has no fear of war with Great Britain. Indeed, Viscount Cecil said as much last week.

"America does not fear us; America knows there is no possibility of war with Great Britain—then why does Washington insist on limiting our navy below the strength the admiralty states we require?" he said. "We must have the cruisers we demand. The admiralty insists they are essential to our defense." Concerning the United States' demand for 10,000-ton cruisers he asked: "But why does America need these boats? What possible potential enemy can she have in mind for such weapons?"

In the experts' sessions concerning submarines the United States won when Great Britain's efforts to have 21-inch caliber torpedoes reduced were rejected and the Anglo-Japanese proposals to divide submarines into two classes—coast defense craft of about 600 tons and fleet submersibles capable of going to sea with a combat squadron approximating 1,600 tons, were abandoned. The experts decided merely to limit the size of the largest submarines and set 1,800 tons as the tentative maximum.

China's voice was heard in the conference for the first time when Chao Hsin-chu, representative in the council of the League of Nations, made this announcement:

"It is repeatedly reported in the press of the Far East that the naval conference may also consider questions relating to China. I therefore have been requested by the Chinese national government and the people to state that the republic will refuse to recognize any decision affecting China which may be arrived at by the present, or any other conference in which China is not represented, participating equally in the deliberations."

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE had a lot of fun last week, mixed up with business. In the first place he celebrated his fifty-fifth birthday on the birthday of the nation, receiving innumerable messages of congratulation, eating a wonderful cake and receiving the mounted boy scout troop from Custer. The lads presented to the President a beautiful bay mare and a complete cowboy outfit of clothing, and he promptly donned the elaborate regalia. Next day, still wearing his cowboy hat, he attended the Tri-State Roundup at Bellefourche. Mrs. Coolidge acompanied him, and they enjoyed hugely the doings of the wild riders, Indians in war dress, cowboys and trick riders gathered from all parts of the West. The Chief Executive had ignored protests from organized sentimentalists against what they called the "commercialized cruelty" of the rodeo. Wednesday Mr. Coolidge put on his chaps and took a long ride on his new mare.

Most important of the week's visitors at the summer White House was Ambassador Sheffield, who conferred with the President on the Mexican situation, reporting fully on conditions in the neighboring republic, and presumably also discussing the question of his resignation. He has been wanting for a year to give up his post and the time may be considered opportune. John J. Garrett of Maryland and Silas Strawn have been mentioned as successor to Mr. Sheffield.

COMMANDER BYRD and the other members of the crew of the transatlantic plane America were the recipients of many honors in Paris, and the commander was awarded the cross of the Legion of Honor. The aviators booked passage for return to the United States starting July 12. Byrd says he plans to lead a two-plane expedition to the Antarctic in the fall which will spend perhaps a year and a half in procuring information about the continent at the South pole. Clarence Chamberlin also planned immediate return to the United States by steamer, having declined to pilot the Columbia back, but Charles A. Levine said he was hunting for a French pilot who would bring him home on the big plane.

GENERAL CHEN and a large part of his Chinese army went over to the Nationalists and as a result the southerners gained possession of most of Shantung province and at last reports were but a few miles from Tsingtao. The northern forces were still holding Tsinanfu, the capital, and a narrow strip north of the Yellow river. Conditions in Shantung were such that Japan decided to send two thousand more Japanese troops from Dairen to Tsingtao, and a hundred military railway men and telegraphers also were hurried into that region. This movement further enraged the Chinese against the Japanese and caused them to forget their animosity against the British.

KING FUAD of Egypt, whose sovereignty was threatened recently by Great Britain, went to London on a state visit and was received with great pomp by King George, the royal family and the government. He was accompanied by Premier Sarwat Pasha, and the British foreign office undertook to work out with him a treaty which should settle the relations between Egypt and Great Britain for years to come. This plan, however, was opposed by Lord Lloyd, British commissioner in Egypt, who believes the parliamentary regime there will collapse before long and that the British will then have to revive the protectorate. King Fuad is entirely subservient to the British, but Sarwat Pasha is said to be under the influence of Zaghloul Pasha, the Nationalist leader, who opposes the surrender of Egyptian claims to independence.

THOUGH stories of counter-revolutionary movements in Russia are often not trustworthy, those coming now are too numerous and too detailed to be ignored. The revival of the Red terror by the Soviet rulers has failed to terrify their opponents and the anti-British campaign conducted by the government does not distract the attention of the population from domestic to foreign questions. In secret meetings held in central Europe the couriers of the counter-revolution reported a tremendous increase in the dissensions among the Bolshevik leaders, with a new man rising in the background as a lieutenant of M. Stalin, present dictator of Moscow policies. He is M. Eliawa, formerly a quiet member of the party but steadily gaining influence over M. Stalin, since he, too, is a former south Russian peasant. Meanwhile 50,000 counter-revolutionists have succeeded in smuggling themselves into Russian factories.

AT LAST D. C. Stephenson, former ruler of the Indiana Ku Klux klan and now a life convict, has told to the authorities his story of alleged corruption in Hoosier politics, and the people of the state are awaiting a grand explosion. Stephenson made his revelations to Prosecuting Attorney W. H. Remy of Indianapolis, and that official declined to tell what he heard until he is ready for action. Indianapolis newspapers asserted that Stephenson "told all"; that he hit high and low officialdom; that he revealed how he managed and paid for the campaign of Gov. Ed Jackson; that he told of ruling the legislature, dictating which bills should pass and which should die; that he played a stellar role in the election of Mayor John L. Duvall of Indianapolis; that he dabbled in the election of a United States senator, and much more along that line.

On the other hand, Stephenson's attorney declared that his client's only charges had to do with the pending prosecution of Mayor Duvall. The ex-grand dragon himself said in part:

"There's a little seat in the chair shop next to me that is vacant, and I expect to have company before long. I have not blown the entire lid off the Indiana situation. Remy did not insist that I do so. The rest will come later, and I promise that when the entire truth is told there will be a clean-up in this state that will startle the country and will benefit the state immeasurably."

REPUBLICANS of New Jersey, in state convention, overrode the decision of their resolutions committee and the protests of the women delegates and wrote into their platform a plank calling for a Volstead law referendum similar to that passed by the voters of New York last fall. The debate was bitter, the final vote being 67 to 18. It is believed the action will have an important bearing on the gubernatorial and senatorial elections of 1928.

The New Jersey Democrats also held their convention and adopted a platform demanding the right to make and consume light wines and beer.

Trains Navy Men to Make Parachute Leap

Lakehurst, N. J.—Alva F. Starr has helped a hundred men "to die—and yet live." Starr is "professor of higher education" at the navy's only parachute school.

His latest class of eight has just proved itself competent of packing parachutes and jumping with them. And the "professor," who, in navy parlance, is chief boatswain's mate, feels justifiably proud that none of his boys has "fallen down" in his studies.

Starr, veteran of ninety or more jumps from every type of aircraft, including the Shenandoah, the Los Angeles, land planes, seaplanes and kite balloons, still keenly remembers his first leap into space.

He had been a witness of a fatal jump a few days before his turn came. And his suspense was heightened by being forced to wait for a companion to leap.

Starr was thankful that the interval before his jump was short enough to release his parachute.

His first thought afterward was that "dying was not so bad after all, for a death-like stillness prevails around you once you have left the plane, and to me this stillness denoted only one thing, that I had been killed. These drops were made from an altitude of 5,000 feet, and no more surprised or happy person ever lived than myself when, after a rather severe shock on landing, I found myself walking around absolutely unhurt."

FAMOUS MINING STRIKES

By THOMAS E. STEWARD

Discovery of Big Deposits in Minnesota

BEGINNING in the late Sixties there was intermittent prospecting for iron ore in northern Minnesota. Geologists considered the formations to be more than likely to contain large deposits. Exploration went ahead chiefly between Embarrass lake and Birch lake, on the eastern end of the range. Yet not a single deposit of iron ore of such size and character as to warrant mining had been turned in, according to Leith. In fact, the range had been rejected by many mining men who had examined it. This was largely due to the fact that they paid most attention to the eastern end, which contains "magnetite," an ore in such close association with other rocks that it is extremely difficult to work.

Among the most persistent of the Mesabi prospectors were the celebrated Merritt family of Duluth. These were eight brothers—Lon, perhaps the best known; Alfred, L. J., C. C., T. B., A. R., J. E., and W. J. Merritt. Their faith in the range was the first to be rewarded in 1890, although the biggest strikes came in the year following. On November 16, 1890, one of their test pit crews, in charge of Capt. J. A. Nichols of Duluth, struck ore just north of what is now the famous Mountain Iron mine. This was followed in 1891 by the discovery of ore in what is now the territory of the Biwabik and Cincinnati mines.

John McCaskill, an explorer, observed iron ore clinging to the roots of an upturned tree on what is now the Biwabik property. This led to test pitting, and test pitting by the Merritts on the area of the Biwabik mine, under charge of W. J. Merritt, led to the discovery of this mine in August, 1891. The Cincinnati mine was opened the same fall and several others followed in 1892.

The discovery of ore near what are now known as the towns of Virginia, Eveleth and Hibbing followed in rapid succession. The excitement that followed the original strike at Mountain Iron was greatly increased by each succeeding find and in 1892 there came the inevitable rush of prospectors and adventurers. The old days of western mining camps were re-enacted in northern Minnesota.

The hardships of early prospectors who followed the big strikes on the Mesabi range were those of travel rather than of hardship in far distant regions. Leaving the railroad at what was called Mesabi Station, they were compelled to travel 12 to 50 miles along "tote" roads that were all but impassable. And when they plunged into the wilderness they were confronted by a succession of fallen trees, huge boulders and deep swamps that made their lives wretched. Notwithstanding these hardships they covered the area and with the explorers of rich mining companies discovered most of the famous deposits of iron ore in northern Minnesota. The sum that these discoveries have added to the national wealth must be measured in billions.

The American Radium Strike

RADIUM was "discovered," or rather isolated from other chemical elements in 1898 by the famous Polish scientist, Madame Curie, working in her laboratory in Paris.

For many years prior to that time western prospectors had been noting the peculiar deposits of a substance known geologically as carnotite that existed in considerable quantities in the Colorado mountains.

Following the discovery of radium and the revelation that carnotite was a mineral from which radium could be extracted, once a commercial process was found that would separate the radium at a cost that was not prohibitive, new value was placed on these Colorado claims.

It remained for a Pittsburgh family by the name of Flannery to make the plunge. Headed by one of the brothers, Joseph Flannery, they bought up a large number of Colorado carnotite claims and began spending money in research that would show a way to get out the radium.

As the years passed they came several times almost to the point of abandoning this venture and are said actually to have been in meeting, planning to stop work, when, in 1913, a technical man burst into the room with the announcement that a process had been perfected.

Extraction of radium from carnotite became an important American industry, measured on the minute scale that governs where radium is concerned. America began to produce about 25 to 30 grams of pure radium annually.

From 1913 until 1923 the Flannery radium concern dominated not only the American market but practically the world market for radium. In 1923, however, came more important discoveries of radium in the Belgian Congo. There radium was produced at a cost much below the American and in quantities approximately twice as large, four grams a month or nearly fifty a year. Since the Congo deposits, which come from a different ore from carnotite, have been worked the production of this rare and mysterious element has stopped in the United States.

Bill Tilden Is Tennis King

Although Henri Cochet eliminated Tilden from the American championship last year and has seen several of his countrymen down the American player, "Big Bill" is still king of the tennis world to this young French star, who contributes an article to the July issue of the American Boy Magazine.

He says, "Why we French think William Tilden is the best player in the world is a question not hard to answer. He has the strongest service I've ever seen—a serve that flashes like a rifle shot over the net from its start high over Tilden's head, and barely bounces after it brushes the court almost at the service line. His drives, forehand or backhand, burn to the corners of the court with searching accuracy and baffling, dazzling speed. He controls the ball with marvelous skill; he has no mechanical weaknesses in his game. And he's the keenest analyst in modern tennis. He plays, usually, at least one stroke ahead—that is, he's always planning, when he makes a return, on how it will affect his opponent and on what he'll do next."

Cochet feels that provided he doesn't weaken unexpectedly, and that the injured leg that bothered him last year doesn't do so in 1927, his chances of taking back his championships are excellent. He says, "Every French player who has faced him believes this thoroughly. He's the most feared player in tennis today."

As to the frequently made statement that the young Frenchman changed his style to win the fifth and last set of his match with Tilden, Cochet considers that "the bunk." He writes, "Off hand, I can't remember ever having seen a tennis match won by that sudden 'change of style,' often talked about by sport writers. Frankly, I don't believe an actual change of style is a possibility for one player out of a thousand—certainly not, for the young player or the man of average tennis ability, who must put all his energies to perfecting the one style that suits him, individually, best.

"Tilden and his splendnd little Davis cup teammate, William Johnston, play the driving, powerful, forcing style of game; Rene Lacoste, the twenty-three-year-old Parisian who is the only player ever to have beaten Tilden in a Davis cup match, and who won the American championship last year a week after his defeat of Tilden, plays a softer style, making use of the lob; Jean Borotra, runner-up to Lacoste in the American tournament, is a smasher and a dasher, an all-over-the-court man; Vincent Richards, the young American, plays a game marked for its deadly volleying as well as its driving.

"I don't mean, of course, that these men don't vary—that Tilden doesn't lob, or Lacoste does not drive, or that Richards doesn't cover the court like a flash. But varying a game and changing style are two different things, and I think that every man who wants to win matches on the tennis court should acquaint himself thoroughly with the difference.

"If I were giving advice to the average player—which means just about anybody not in the championship class—I would urge him to develop, first of all, his own best style of play to the utmost. At the same time, I'd tell him to be very sure he was neglecting no other department of the game in his study of his specialty."

"Street Fights" Barred in Ring Rules in France

La savate, French boxing in which both feet and hands are used, is losing ground, because it is too dangerous.

Its supporters contend that boxing should be exactly in the nature of street fighting. A ruffian, they point out, does not obey ring rules and the art of self-defense ought to equip a man to meet realities.

Nevertheless, la savate is a dying sport, limited to "touches," instead of a finish fight. Its effectiveness in street fighting, however, is demonstrated daily, the police say. A school is still devoted to it in Paris.

Big League Owners Have No Sentiment

When one considers how devoid of "sentiment" are most of the big league magnates, he cannot blame ball players for holding out for big salaries.

There is the classic instance of Casey Stengel. In the last world's series between the Giants and the Yankees, if we remember correctly, Casey hit home runs enabling the Giants to win their only two games.

After his heroic work in that world's series, one would have thought that Casey would have had a lifetime job. But not so. The following winter, the veteran was shipped off to the Boston Braves.

ERNIE NEVERS IS A BASEBALL STAR

One of Few Gridiron Players to Shine on Diamond.

Ernie Nevers, pitcher on the staff of the St. Louis Browns, is the only all-American football player in the major leagues. As a plunging, running, kicking and passing back at Stanford he won the highest honor the game can bestow in 1925.

Nevers was a better football fullback than he is baseball pitcher but he is improving and may grow to be a star.

Great football players in recent years have not been sensational successes in baseball.

Two star pitchers of earlier days, Christy Mathewson and Chief Bender, were good football players at Bucknell and Dickinson.

Jim Thorpe, rated by followers of the game as football's greatest player, did not start a conflagration in major league baseball. He was never on very good terms with curve balls and big league hooks finally proved his nemesis. He was an outfielder of sorts.

Gordon Cochrane of the Athletics and Boston university was a great football player, and should be classed, perhaps, not very far behind Nevers.

Frankie Frisch was the Fordham flash as a quarterback before he broke into major league baseball, and Eddie Collins played quarter for Columbia several years before Frisch entered Fordham.

Vic Hanson, Syracuse all-American end and captain of the baseball team, was invited to join the Yankees and other clubs but declined.

Mike Gazella, utility infielder of the Yankees, did not have to sit on the bench when the Lafayette football team was playing. Glenn Killinger, all-American back at Penn state, was never able to make the all-Yankees, and the same fate befell Howard Berry, the Pennsylvania dynamo, who made an unsuccessful bid for a place in the cast of the Giants.

Connie Mack was born sixty-five years ago in Brookfield, Mass., and was a shoemaker before he took to baseball.

Overton Tremper, University of Pennsylvania outfielder, has been obtained by the Brooklyn National league club.

Don Miller, pitcher for the Michigan baseball team for the last two years, has reported to the New York American league baseball team.

Pitcher John Miljus left the Seattle team recently, saying he was through. The club immediately placed an indefinite suspension on the player.

Probably somewhere at some time a pitcher was traded for a bat bag and $50 and didn't come back six weeks later and hold his old team to four singles.

* * *

Frank Bushey, who pitched St. Mary's college baseball team of St. Mary's, Kan., to nine victories out of ten games this year, reported to the Boston Red Sox.

* * *

Manager Johnny Lavan of Lincoln has paid under protest a fine of $100 levied against him by President Gear for causing a game to be forfeited in a recent game in Tulsa.

* * *

Kal Segrist, third baseman and former manager of the Omaha Western league team, has been traded for Pete Brausen, third baseman of the Des Moines Western league team, who will become manager of the Omahans.

* * *

Who remembers when it cost 25 cents to sit back of first base and if a spectator caught a foul he threw it back to the catcher?

* * *

Baseball has made great strides in Japan and now the game of rounders, from which it was derived, is played at Cambridge and Oxford.

Pie Traynor, third baseman and captain of the Pirates, is described by a sport writer as a "many-sided ball player." We had thought that would be Mr. Fothergill.

ABOUT BEACH ENSEMBLES AND MATCHING PARASOLS

WHEN madam or mademoiselle lolls so happily, lazily under her vivid beach parasol or promenades in the warm sands or perhaps prettily poses upon the pier as she does in this picture, she is expected to do so in gorgeous array.

In the selection of her beach robe, be it coolie coat or one of the large new shawl squares, her headgear, her sandals, likewise her bright parasol and gay cushions and all the accoutrement which goes to make up a perfect ensemble, milady of fashion exercises as fastidious taste as she does in the choosing of her most formal and fetching ballroom attire. And when she does just so, behold! a radiant picture of decorative display on the beach, such as this illustration sets forth.

Silk in Vivid Stripes Popular.

For this "useful as well as ornamental" beach robe striped khaki kool is the preferred medium. The cap is also of this Romany-striped material.

At every step of the way along this sandy shore one meets these sirens of the sea clad in spectacular beach array. Among the most popular beach coats which affect the picturesque in color are many of smart linen crash dashingly printed, then bordered by way of contrast with black satin.

Of all the interesting beach styles none are perhaps more interesting, at least from the point of novelty, than are the capes and coats made of heavy unbleached muslin, decorated to simulate hand-painting For instance an artful all-enveloping cape with scarf ties at the throat is bordered to a considerable depth with a huge colorful fish and seashell design.

This new fashion of hand-painted unbleached muslin for resort wear bids fair to assume the proportions of a widespread vogue before the summer is past. One can make such clever coolie coats of the muslin, painting them as amusingly and gorgeously gay as one chooses.

Gingham, too, is receiving its share of notice for beach apparel and bathing suits. Cretonne, also, continues to enliven the beach style, as it appears made up in robes, parasols, beadwear, neckwear, footwear, gloves, handbag, parasol, jewelery, boutonnierre and other items down to the minutest detail. Especially is this so, since fashion has become so arbitrary on the subject, accepting as an evidence of correct dress, nothing less than a perfectly appointed—a unified ensemble.

This demand for harmony in dress has resulted in a genuine "get together" spirit among coutourier, milliner, bootmaker, jeweler and others who contribute to the costuming of the fair sex. It is quite the proper thing to buy one's silk hose at one's favorite bootery, in order to insure a perfect match to one's slippers, and as likely as not the salesman will insist on showing you a handbag made of the selfsame leathers as the shoes you are considering.

This summer, matching parasols have especially entered into the scheme of things. Maybe it is a sunshade of scenic print silk to match the scarf and hat which milady chooses to perfect her ensemble such as is shown in this picture.

The latest is for handbag and parasol to show some relationship, perhaps in color, perhaps in material. Snakeskin trimmings are finding their way into the realm of woman's fashions most successfully. A new idea is the snakeskin handbag, with an interworking of the snakeskin in an accompanying umbrella. The illustration shows clever parasol and handbag sets, such as would add smartness to the street costume. Often a belt of snakeskin accompanies a parasol and handbag trimmed with the same.

Ribbon plays an important part in relating the hat to the parasol in that the identical kind used to trim the former also borders the latter. Ombre grosgrain ribbon is mostly favored for this.

Bridesmaid's Frocks

Very charming are bridesmaids' frocks fashioned on robe de style lines. They are of old blue taffeta with a wide band of rose color taffeta brought around the shoulders and down the front to the waistline where it ties in a huge bow with long ends.

Tortoise Shell and Gold

A trifle of exquisite daintiness is a tiny rouge box with a top and bottom of real tortoise shell held together with bands of finely etched gold.

Tulle Dance Frocks

Frocks of tulle in two shades of a single color are very charming and are being worn by very smart debutantes and the younger girls. Skirts are very full, while waists are long and emphasized by swathed hip sashes.

Black Lace and Flesh Satin

Black lace in a filmy design is used with great success for frocks mounted over a foundation of flesh color satin.

The deer are protected by the big holdings of the Spring Valley Water Company but they wander from their hiding places and it is then that the hunter bags his quarry.

A Lively Game

The big game of baseball between the base hospital and a team from Mountain View at the diamond of the former last Sunday was so interesting and close that a free for all fight ensued after a close decision by the umpire. It required the services of the guards at the hospital to stop the melee. It took eleven innings to decide the game which resulted in a score of five to four in favor of the hospital. It sure was an interesting contest. A game at Palo Alto between a team from that place and a nine from the Mission, San Francisco, also was featured by a fracas. The Palo Alto police had to be pressed into service to prevent bloodshed on the diamond. The game was close and the intense excitement brought on words between the players that resulted in a fist fight.

Clough, which has been leased for a year by Edward Strathmire of Redwood City, who is associated with the S. P. Co. in San Francisco. Clough will start building a Duplex bungalow and a 5-room modern cottage on Laurel avt next month. The county is repairing Pine street and Cherry avenue.
